me: hey, what
me: whayt
me: sorry, lol me: what's up?
Khristina: hey Khristina: how've u been?
me: been great, anything new with you?
Khristina: yea
Khristina: i'm in J-school Khristina: i've been reading your column in huffington post me: have you seen anything about Project PM?
Khristina: no
Khristina: i don't have any time Khristina: oh wait Khristina: ...
Khristina: no not that i can think of me: I'm referring to the project I'm launching this summer, incorporates a network of very capable bloggers and print journalists as well as a separate governing body that oversees our various efforts, which... me: ... mostly involve media reform, forcing accountability on the part of traditional news outlets me: and sort of developing critical mass intentionally from time to time such that the major outlets are prompted to address what we need them to and what they otherwise wouldn't Khristina: oh sounds interesting me: anyway, I've recruited about 40 people, 30 for the administrative network and the rest being bloggers with a combined monthly readership of several hundred thousand me: so, let me know if you'd like to participate in the administrative network, it won't be any time commitment as you can provide as little input as you'd like or none, but will have the option to participate with a number of prominent and talented people on something that we've all deemed to be a viable project me: give it some thought and Google Project PM for details, and get back to me if you're interested me: anyway, good luck with everything else Khristina: thanks i'll take a look at it me: great, I appreciate you taking the time to do so
